The local area

Forest Hall is a village east of Benton in North Tyneside in the north of England. Until the mid 1960s it was a sleepy village with a railway station on the main line to Edinburgh.

There are pubs, social clubs such as Forest Hall Ex-Servicemens institute. There's a shopping centre with a variety of shops, take away food outlets, restaurants, two supermarkets and a Health Centre. Forest Hall has frequent buses through the village centre; Newcastle upon Tyne City centre is approximately 15-20 minutes travel by bus. Benton Metro station is about a half mile from the centre of Forest Hall.

Newcastle city has in the recent years grown to become one of the most vibrant cities in the UK with great shopping malls and cultural attractions, elegant Georgian architecture, first-class museums and galleries, art, music, sports and nightlife among many other features. It has earned its place as one of the capitals of north, attracting an increasing number of visitors.

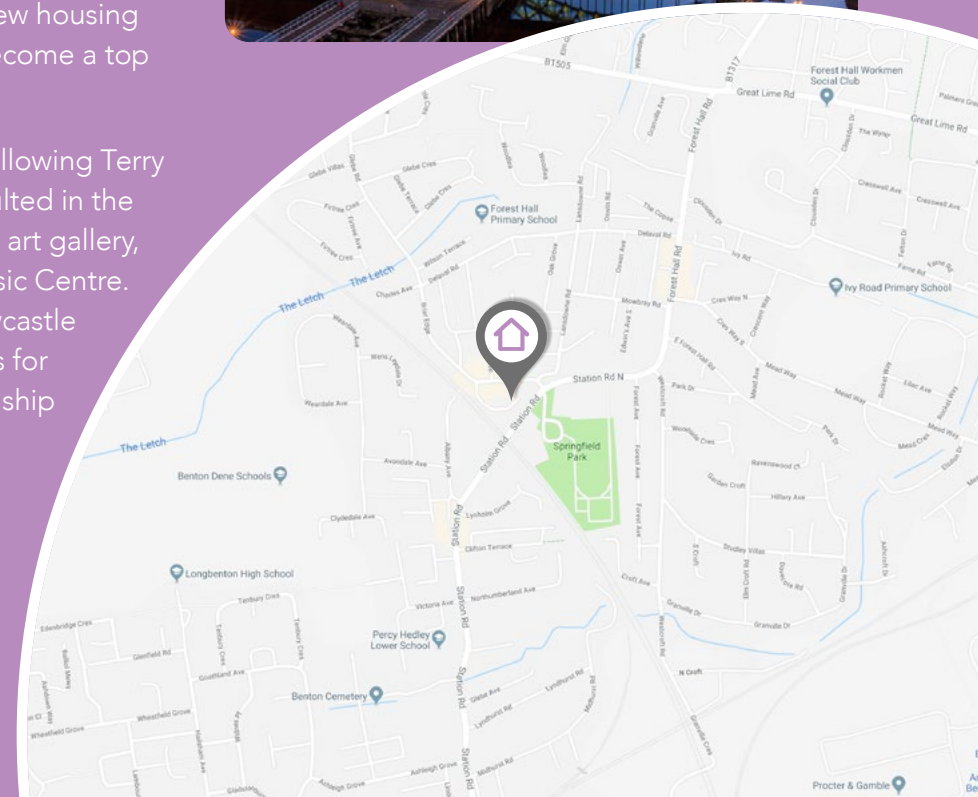

Regeneration of Newcastle Quayside.

Sir Terry Farrell, a British architect, also appears to have played a dominant role in the regeneration of Newcastle quayside. The quayside in Newcastle upon Tyne which was once a busy commercial dockside has in the recent years become run-down and redeveloped to provide an environment for modern arts, music and culture. Along with the new housing developments, the Quayside has become a top ten attraction in Newcastle.

The regeneration of the quayside following Terry Farrells master plan of 1991 has resulted in the acclaimed Millennium Bridge, Baltic art gallery, and development of a Regional Music Centre. As a result of the regeneration, Newcastle Quayside has become a major focus for leisure with concerts, music, art and ship events conducted on the Quayside.
